Beyond the shadows which surround Our troubled mortal life, There lies a land where never wakes The sound of soil or strife; Where sickness mover pales the cheek, Where starts no cry of pain, Where gladness settles on the soul, And never lists again.

No billows break along its shore, No tempests sweep the sl The beauty of the Lord on and On all things there doth tie; Eternal calm, unending peace, Reign in that blissful land; O happy they who reach its rest, And stand at God's right hand!

There all the pure in heart are found, Their very thoughts are praise; They sing the endless death of sin, Christ's triumph song they raise; Before the pierced feet which led Their spirits up to light, They yield the homage of their love, Arrayed in robes of white.

No more they weep, no more they watch, No more the Tempter dread; The dark perplexities of old Are ever from them fled; Saved by the all-redeeming blood, They breathe the balm of bliss, They know that Christ is theirs for aye, They know that they are His.

Our Father-God, we long to reach, Their fellowship of rest To see the glory of our Lord, And be forever blest; Guide us through smooth and silent seas, And o'er the stormy foam, Until we strike the sunlit shore,
